In the Marine Corps, Hodson finally found a place where he felt comfortable. "The last time he was home, he said joining the Marines was the best thing he ever did," says Mara Edinger, a friend and high school classmate. "He really felt he belonged to something." Hodson's four-year stint was due to end in June, and he was trying to decide whether to go college and study engineering or make a career with the Marines. "He was leaning toward the Marines," says Michelle Smith, a friend near Kansas City, MO. Hodson was single but had two sons: Braden, 2, who lives with his mother in Kansas City, MO, and Marius, 1, who lives with his mother in North Carolina. He also has a twin sister, Nicole, also in Kansas City. His mother, Gloria Burton, died of cancer in October. "He was a great person; there wasn't anybody who met him didn't like him," Smith said. The primary draw to enlist was to finance a college education, says Wayne Kreuger, principal at Smithville High School, where Hodson graduated in 1999. His passion was basketball and he was one of the better players on the varsity team. "Nick was the kind of kid who gave what he did his all," Kreuger said. Since graduating, Hodson visited the school on a few occasions, sometimes in uniform. Said Kreuger, "He was proud to be a Marine."

He was listed as missing until April 13, when the Defense Department announced his remains had been identified. He was serving during Operation Iraqi Freedom. Carolyn Hutchings has an 800-page government document in her hands and the belief that questions about her son's death in Iraq will diminish with time. It's been a long year waiting to confirm how her 20-year-old son, Pvt. Nolen Ryan Hutchings, died just days after the fighting started in Iraq. "It was friendly fire," said Carolyn Hutchings, who met for six hours Saturday with Marines who explained that her son died after his vehicle was mistaken for a pickup truck reported to be carrying the enemy dressed as Americans. While the Marines answered her many questions, she said they also left her with the thick document that covered the year-long investigation. "I feel better now," she said. "I'll have to read through all this to see what it's all about." He was reported missing during fighting on the outskirts of Nasiriyah when his unit tried to secure a bridge and help wounded soldiers. His unit was hit by an errant strike from an Air Force A-10 warplane providing air support. Nolen Hutchings was South Carolina's second casualty in the war in Iraq and one of eight in his unit to die March 23. Hutchings and her husband, Larry, waited three weeks to know whether their son was alive or dead. Not content to wait for the authorities to notify them, after almost two weeks, Larry Hutchings called a site in the United States where the victims had been returned from the friendly fire incident that occurred on the day the Marines said their son was missing. Their worst fears were confirmed by telephone late that night, which led the Hutchings to more intensely question what happened. Carolyn Hutchings struggled to accept her son's death because she had not been able to see him, although she believed the Marines' reports based on DNA tests that the body that came home to Boiling Springs was her son's. She does not plan to let go of the lengthy report from the Marines who investigated his death. "Now I know — finally," she said. "They helped me understand." Nolen Ryan Hutchings was adopted in the fifth grade and grew up wanting to be a Marine. He signed up not long after graduating from Boiling Springs (S.C.) High School in 2000. "He was proud to be a Marine. We were proud of him," said his father, Larry Hutchings.
