Brendon Reiss loved the water. As a high school student in Casper, WY, he'd play in a neighbor's swimming pool until his skin was waterlogged. He stayed in the water until it got dark the night before he was to leave for boot camp. A world away in Iraq, Reiss lost his life above the water of the Euphrates River. His Marine unit came under heavy fire while trying to secure a bridge near Nasiriyah. Reiss, 23, had been listed as missing after the March 23 battle. The machine-gunner's status was changed to killed in action after authorities identified his remains. The son of a decorated Vietnam veteran, Reiss had been married for three years. His wife, Tensley, lives with family near Chattanooga, TN. He called her on their third anniversary, just weeks before he disappeared, family members said. Officials told his relatives that Reiss was killed when a rocket-propelled grenade hit the troop carrier he was in. "I'm at peace with it," said his mother, Angela Reiss of Casper. "What we feel, so many other people feel, too." When he was missing, his stepmother, Carol Reiss, said his disappearance was just more proof that you have to be grateful for each and every day. "You know you always think that you should treat every moment as the last moment of your life. But you never do. None of us ever do. And you know we always think the next day is going happen, certain things will happen. It's a wakeup call."

Rosacker was a talented high-school athlete who married his high school sweetheart and pursued his goals without fanfare. He grew up in San Diego knowing he would join the Marine Corps. He even wrote essays in high school about his plans to become a Marine. That's how his teachers and his father remember the 21-year-old. "He didn't go in much for publicity. He got talked about a lot as an athlete, but he just blew it off. He was on the wrestling team and played football and baseball," said his father, Rod Rosacker, who lives in Bremerton, WA. He's a command master chief with the Navy aboard the ballistic missile submarine Alabama. He returned March 24 from three months at sea. "We got the message from chaplains," Rod Rosacker said. "I've been in the Gulf four times. He'd been over there 2 1/2 months. When I heard about the fighting there I was worried. It's something you know can happen. You just hope it will never happen to you." Shortly before deploying to the Persian Gulf, the younger Rosacker had been in an accident in which he fell off the back of a truck. He was still recovering from that, his father said. Rosacker graduated from Junipero Serra High School in San Diego in 2000. He joined the Marines to "do something for his country," his father said. "He was an all-around good student and athlete," said Donna Somerville, principal of his high school. "His coaches all speak highly of his dedication to sports. And his English teacher told me that he used to write essays about becoming a Marine. Some of the senior students remember him, and there's a lot of grief here." Rosacker is survived by his wife of two years, Brooke, who lives in San Diego, his parents, and two younger sisters, Samantha and Antoinette, also of Bremerton.
