FAMILIA, Miosotis Familia

(Abstracted from internet sources)

Officer Miosotis Familia of the New York Police Department was the youngest of nine brothers and sisters, a family dynamic that gave her an outspoken personality and a no-nonsense edge, a nephew said — and made her a perfect fit for her job. On Wednesday morning, Officer Familia, 48, died after she was shot in the head by a man who the police say fired a revolver into a parked police vehicle in the Bronx. She was taken to St. Barnabas Hospital, where she was pronounced dead about three hours later. The gunman, who was identified as Alexander Bonds, was fatally shot by the police a short time later, after he drew a gun, the police said. Mr. Bonds, 34, was paroled four years ago after serving seven years in state prison. The killing of Officer Familia thrust the department into mourning and her family into grief. "She would set anybody straight," the nephew, John Cuello, said in an interview. "I've seen a lot of her putting her siblings in their place. Holding her ground. Her attitude was, 'I might be the youngest one, but I'm the toughest one.'" He recalled her encouraging her nieces and nephews, whenever they got into neighborhood scrapes, to confront their problems head on, and never hide. She used that strength to raise her three children — a boy and girl who are twins, and a daughter who is in college, Mr. Cuello said — as well to care for her mother, who lived with her and the twins in their apartment in Kingsbridge Heights, about two miles north of where she was killed. Officer Familia became a police officer at age 36 after holding a number of different jobs. It was instantly a good fit, her nephew said. "She was a warrior, tell you the truth," Mr. Cuello said. "She was a fighter, she was tough — and that was the job for her." Milton Castro, 47, a professional photographer, grew up in Washington Heights with Officer Familia, where she stood out among the other teenagers, he said: She was louder, funnier, bolder. "If we were in a circle in front of the junior high school, or in front of a building, she would be in the middle of everyone, making jokes, telling a story," he said. Mr. Castro described their childhood in Washington Heights as fraught — it was a time when the city was buffeted by a crack cocaine epidemic and high rates of crime that hit the streets of their youth particularly hard. "She was a survivor," he said. "She was around all of that stuff like we all were as kids, and she came out of that wanting to help people and wanting to become a police officer. It's a testament to who she was as a person." She wore shield number 7370 and joined the force 12 years ago, most recently assigned to the 46th Precinct, covering Fordham, Morris Heights and other neighborhoods in the northwest Bronx. Since March, Officer Familia was regularly assigned to a marked police van stationed on West 183rd Street, where a rash of shootings had erupted over the winter. She was there on Tuesday night and into early Wednesday morning, and she was sitting inside the vehicle with her partner, Officer Vincent Maher, when she was killed. Officer Familia never expressed reservations about the dangers of being a police officer, or anxiety about the recent attacks against the police, exuding a toughness that meant her family rarely feared for her, her nephew said. They felt confident in her ability to take care of herself. "She would say, 'There was nothing easy about it,'" Mr. Cuello said. "But she loved what she did." Relatives said that her children were her chief focus. "Being pregnant with twins — it must have been miserable, but she was so happy," said Claudia Collazo, whose sister had been married to one of Officer Familia's brothers for nearly three decades. "Her smile was as big as her heart." Her red brick apartment complex on Sedgwick Avenue is not far from where she was shot. On Wednesday, uniformed police officers stood sentry outside as people arrived, some sobbing, reaching to clasp the officers' hands. Inside the apartment, her mother and all but one of her siblings had gathered to mourn her, said a family friend, Ramona Román, 56. The last, a brother, was flying in from the Dominican Republic, where the family is from, she said. In the officer's home, Ms. Román said as she left, no one spoke a word of the man who killed her. Out on Sedgwick Avenue, neighbors discussed her death in heated tones. Officer Familia appeared to have been circumspect about her profession. She did not wear her uniform around the neighborhood, said Rafael Mercedes, 49. He had not known she was an officer until he learned of the shooting. "She was a very loved woman in the neighborhood," he said. "Everyone loved her." The 46th Precinct posted about the loss on its Twitter account. "We welcome prayers for our beloved sister. Thanks for your support in our time of need." On Wednesday afternoon, Mayor Bill de Blasio ordered all flags on city buildings to be flown at half-staff in Officer Familia's honor.

A peaceful, loving and spiritual person, Fran was a positive influence on many of the lifelong friends she made while stationed in North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Alabama, Texas, Illinois, Washington, Alaska, New Jersey, the Panama Canal Zone and Washington DC. In 1970, Fran and Ned retired to Clearwater, FL, where Fran made many dear friends and enjoyed relaxing and homemaking in one place for nearly 40 years. Ned Waldo Farr, Jr., age 91 died in Sarasota, FL December 9, 2011. Born April 8, 1920 in New Roads, LA, Ned first realized his boyhood dream of flying while completing the Civilian Pilot Training program in college at LSU in 1939. He joined the US Army Air Corps in 1941 and, until his retirement from the US Air Force in 1969 with the rank of Lt Colonel, flew numerous military aircraft including C-47's during World War II and some of the first helicopters. Ned so thoroughly enjoyed his military career that he claimed "it never felt like work. I'd have paid them to let me do it". Ned had a natural gift for fixing just about anything that could break - earning him the affectionate title of "Mr. Fix It". During his retirement in Florida, he put his mechanical engineering background to good use becoming the neighborhood go-to guy for all manner of automotive, appliance and electronic repair - done at no charge other than perhaps a lengthy technical explanation of the cause of the problem and experiencing his off - beat sense of humor. Ned enjoyed life and, although he struggled with health problems during his later years, he always maintained that original spark that made him the unique person he was - loved by all who knew him. He will be dearly missed. Ned is survived by his wife of 66 years, Frances (Allen) Farr; five children: Tom, Carolyn, Steve, Don and Gini; and 12 grandchildren. According to Ned, "Not a dud in the bunch". He is also survived by two sisters: Patricia of Baton Rouge, LA and Willyne of Fernandina Beach, FL. FIORINI-MARESCA, Charlene Ann Fiorini-Maresca

(Abstracted from <http://www.vindy.com/news/tributes/2016/feb/18/charlene-mikki-fiorini-maresca/>)

PORT CHARLOTTE, FL - Charlene "Mikki" Fiorini-Maresca passed away on Feb. 15, 2016, surrounded by her family in Port Charlotte, after a valiant battle with breast cancer, that spanned over 20 years. Born January 14, 1950 in Youngstown, Ohio to Eileen and Stanley Fiorini, Charlene graduated from Campbell Memorial High School and earned an Associate Degree from Youngstown State University and a Bachelor's Degree from Park University. Charlene traveled the world and lived overseas in both the United Kingdom and Spain while serving in the U.S. Navy as a data processing technician second class and as a federal contractor working for Northrup Grumman. Following her overseas assignments, she returned to the U.S. and settled near her parents in Port Charlotte as a caregiver during their years of declining health. Charlene was preceded in death by her parents, Stanley and Eileen Fiorini; and her sister, Tami Sue. She leaves behind her son, Louis (Hannah) Maresca; her granddaughter, Aubrey Maresca; her brother, Gary (Cathy) Fiorini; nephew Alan Fiorini; and nieces Amber and Angelica Fiorini. Charlene was a dedicated mother to her son, Louis, serving as his life coach, a best friend, his greatest fan and the most nurturing of mothers. She was overjoyed with the birth of Aubrey, daughter of Louis and Hannah, and felt very blessed to hold and enjoy her granddaughter, especially during her final days. Family and friends were of extreme importance to Charlene. Her vivacious personality and giving spirit were well-recognized by all who knew her. Charlene's love of life was very infectious and was so welcomed. Charlene refused to allow cancer to conquer her unconquerable spirit. Knowing that her days were numbered, she set out to visit friends in the United Kingdom and Spain. Her loving brother, Gary and sister-in-law Cathy, joined her for the final phase of the overseas trip to Alatri, Italy, the hometown of her paternal grandparents. Together, they formed memories and planned future travel adventures. Upon her return to the states, Charlene continued with her cancer treatment and entered into a clinical trial, fighting to the very end. Adventurer is the one word that defined Charlene's life. In addition to her military service and employment in the private sector, Charlene was an entrepreneur at heart. She pursued a number of business opportunities including a gift shop in her hometown of Campbell, tax preparation for her Hispanic clients, as a social director on a cruise ship and as an independent internet professional. Charlene was always seeking adventure, not only in her professional career, but in her personal life as well. As a world traveler, Charlene developed a wonderful sense of style and was the envy of all her friends. A gourmet cook, Charlene delighted her family and friends with Italian and Spanish cuisine. Charlene was an inspiration to all who knew her, a shining example of living life to the fullest. Her past is a celebration of all that is good in the world, of a life well-lived, well-loved and a world made more beautiful for her having been in it. She will be sorely missed by her family and numerous friends. A celebration of her life will be at the Elm Tree in Struthers on Sunday, Feb. 21, 2016. Her family requests that you honor her memory by toasting Charlene with a favorite glass of wine and giving someone you love the warmest and most heartfelt hug. "That was Mikki's way." The Fiorini family has entrusted the Wasko Funeral Home in Campbell. Interred in Section 3, Site 1429 in the National Cemetery in Sarasota, FL.

FISKE, William Meade Lindsley Fiske III

(Abstracted from several internet sources)

William Meade Lindsley "Billy" Fiske III (4 June 1911 - 17 August 1940) was the 1928 and 1932 Olympic champion bobsled driver and, following Jimmy Davies, was one of the first American pilots killed in action in World War II. At the time Fiske was serving in the Royal Air Force (RAF). He was one of 11 American pilots who flew with RAF Fighter Command between 10 July and 31 October 1940, thereby qualifying for the Battle of Britain clasp to the 1939-45 campaign star. Between his Olympic career and his military service, Fiske was instrumental in the early development of the Aspen ski resort. He and a partner built the first ski lift and lodge in the remote Colorado mountain town. Others would continue their work after the war. Fiske was born in New York in 1911, the son of Beulah and William Fiske, a New England banking magnate. He attended school in Chicago, and then went to school in France in 1924, where he discovered the sport of bobsled at the age of 16. Fiske attended Trinity Hall, Cambridge in 1928 where he studied Economics and History. In 1936 Ted Ryan, an heir of Thomas Fortune Ryan, brought some photographs of mountains near Aspen, Colorado, to Fiske. They had been given to Ryan by a man trying to interest him in investing in a mining claim. Fiske and Ryan, however, saw in them ideal terrain for downhill skiing, and the ski resort the pair had been talking about establishing in the United States, similar to those in the Alps where Fiske had competed in the Olympics. Fiske and Ryan visited Aspen, then a faded mining town decades removed from its boomtown years in the 1880s. Many of the abandoned properties around town were available for very low prices. Fiske bought an option on one, and he and Ryan had blueprints drawn up for a ski lodge. For the next season, they hired guides, including Swiss ski champion André Roch, then studying at Reed College in Oregon. The lodge opened at the end of 1937, and a few weeks later the Boat Tow, an early ski lift, opened. These events are considered the beginning of skiing in Aspen. Fiske then worked at the London office of Dillon, Reed & Co, the New York bankers. On 8 September 1938, Fiske married Rose Bingham, Countess of Warwick, in Maidenhead. In 1928, as driver of the first five-man US Bobsled team to win the Olympics, Fiske became the youngest gold medalist in any winter sport (he was not eclipsed until 1992 by Toni Nieminen), aged just 16 years at the 1928 Winter Olympics in St. Moritz, Switzerland. His American team-mates were Geoffrey Mason, Nion Tocker, Clifford Gray and Richard Parke. Fiske competed again at the 1932 Winter Olympics at Lake Placid, New York, where he carried the United States' flag at the opening ceremony. The format of the race was altered to a four-man team, but again Fiske and his team-mates, Clifford Gray, Eddie Eagan, and Jay O'Brien took gold. Fiske was invited, but declined to lead the bobsled team in the 1936 Winter Olympics in Garmisch-Partenkirchen in Germany. It is believed by some that this decision was due to his disagreeing with the politics in Germany at the time, which may also explain his later decision to join the War-effort in 1940. Fiske was also a Cresta Champion, and was well known for jumps from the Badrutt's Palace Hotel's bar chandelier in St. Moritz. Shortly before the outbreak of World War II, Fiske was recalled to the New York offices of Dillon, Reed & Co, but on 30 August 1939 he returned to England aboard the Aquitania accompanying a bank colleague who was also a member of No. 601 (County of London) Auxiliary Air Force Squadron. Fiske was one of seven US aircrew personnel who fought in the Battle of Britain, although due to the neutrality of the United States, Fiske pretended to be a Canadian. He joined the Royal Air Force Volunteer Reserve and was promoted to the rank of Pilot Officer on 23 March 1940. Fiske undertook his flying training at No. 10 Elementary Flying Training School at RAF Yatesbury, Wiltshire, before moving to RAF Brize Norton, Oxfordshire, for advanced flying training. As an American citizen, he "duly pledged his life and loyalty to the king, George VI," and was formally admitted into the RAF. In his diary, a joyous Fiske wrote, "I believe I can lay claim to being the first U.S. citizen to join the RAF in England after the outbreak of hostilities." On 12 July 1940, Fiske joined No. 601 Squadron RAF, a Hawker Hurricane unit, at RAF Tangmere, West Sussex, the so-called "Millionaires' Squadron", carrying out his first sorties with the squadron on 20 July, when he flew two patrols. On 16 August 1940, in the midst of the Battle of Britain, No. 601 Squadron RAF were scrambled to intercept a squadron of German dive-bombers. Fiske was flying Hurricane serial number P3358. The Squadron destroyed eight Junkers Ju 87 Stukas, but after just 15 minutes of flying time, a German gunner put a bullet through Fiske's fuel tank. With his aircraft badly damaged and his hands and ankles burnt, instead of bailing out, Fiske nursed his Hurricane home, gliding over a hedgerow to the airfield. Although he landed his aircraft safely back at Tangmere, Fiske had to be extracted from the aircraft by ambulance attendants. Shortly after, his fuel tank exploded. Fiske was taken to the Royal West Sussex Hospital in Chichester for treatment, but he died 48 hours later from surgical shock. Fiske was 29 years old. Fiske's funeral took place on 20 August 1940. Six members of Tangmere's ground staff carried Fiske to his final resting place. As his coffin, covered in the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes, was borne on a bier to Boxgrove Priory Church and buried. Fiske is buried in St Mary and St Blaise churchyard in Boxgrove, Sussex. The inscription on his gravestone reads simply: He died for England. The funeral was publicized for propaganda purposes. A memorial stained glass window was dedicated to him on 17 September 2008 at Boxgrove Priory. At the dedication service, a number of former colleagues attended and his green Bentley car was on display. Fiske is listed on the Battle of Britain Monument in London and the Battle of Britain Memorial, Capel-le-Ferne. On 4 July 1941, a plaque was unveiled in the crypt of St Paul's Cathedral, London. The inscription reads: An American citizen who died that England might live. The decision to unveil this plaque on American Independence Day was probably a political one; the United States had not officially joined the war and the British Prime Minister, Winston Churchill, was keen to popularise Fiske's story. The plaque was unveiled by Sir Archibald Sinclair, the Secretary of State for Air. He said at the ceremony: "Here was a young man for whom life held much. Under no kind of compulsion he came to fight for Britain. He came and he fought and he died." Other tributes to Fiske include a memorial tablet dedicated to him in the crypt of the Cathedral of Saint John the Divine, New York. The United States Bobsled and Skeleton Federation also created the Billy Fiske Memorial Trophy as a posthumous tribute to him. The trophy is awarded to the national champion four-man bobsled team each year. FLETCHER, Robert Emmett Fletcher, Jr.

(Abstracted from Elmer's genealogy friend Valerie Brown Elkins)

Bob Fletcher, age 101, a former California agriculture inspector who, ignoring the resentment of neighbors, quit his job in the middle of World War II to manage the fruit farms of Japanese families forced to live in internment camps, died on May 23 in Sacramento. His death was confirmed by Doris Taketa, who was 12 when Mr. Fletcher agreed to run her family's farm in 1942, the year she and her extended family were relocated to the Jerome War Relocation Center in Arkansas. "He saved us." Mr. Taketa said. After Japan bombed Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, the Roosevelt Administration forced 120,000 Japanese-Americans on the West Coast out of their homes and into internment camps for the duration of the War. Near Sacramento, many of the Japanese who were relocated were framers who had worked land around the town of Florin since at least the 1890's. Mr. Fletcher, who was single and in his early 30s at the time, knew many of them through his work inspecting fruit for the government. The farmers regarded him as honest, and he respected their operations. After President Franklin D. Roosevelt signed an executive order in February 1942 that made the relocation possible by declaring certain parts of the West to be military zones, Al Tsukamoto, whose parents arrived in the United States in 1905, approached Mr. Fletcher with a business proposal: would he be willing to manage farms of two family friends of Mr. Tsukamoto's, one of whom was elderly, and to pay the taxes and mortgages while they were away. In return, he could keep all of the profits. Mr. Fletcher and Mr. Tsukamoto had not been close, and Mr. Fletcher had no experience growing the farmer's specialty, flame tokay grapes, but he accepted the offer and soon quit his job. For the next three years he worked a total of 90 acres on three farms - he had also decided to run Mr. Tsukamoto's farm. He worked 18 hour days and lived in the bunkhouse Mr. Tsukamoto had reserved for migrant workers. He paid the bills of all three families, the Tsukamotos, the Okamotos and the Nittas. He kept only half of the profits. Many Japanese-American families lost property while they were in the camps because they could not pay their bills. Most in the Florin area moved elsewhere after the War. When the Tsukamotos returned in 1945, they found that Mr. Fletcher had left them money in the back and that his new wife, Teresa, had cleaned the Tsukamotos' house in preparation for their return. She had chosen to join her husband in the bunkhouse instead of accepting the Tsukamotos' offer to live in the family house. "Teresa's response was, 'it's the Tsukamoto's house,'" recalled Marielle Tsukamoto, who was 5 when she and her family were sent to the Jerome Center. Mr. Tsukamoto is now president of the Florin Chapter of the Japanese American Citizens League. Her mother, Mary Tsukamoto, was a teacher, activist and historical who, with Elizabeth Pinkerton, wrote, "We the People: A Story of Internment in America." Mr. Fletcher's willingness to work the farms was not well received in Florin, where before the War some people had resented the Japanese immigrants for their success. Japanese children in the area were required to attend segregated schools. Mr. Fletcher was unruffled by personal attacks; he felt the Japanese farmers were being mistreated. "I did know a few of them pretty well and never did agree with the evacuation." He told the Sacramento Bee in 2010. "They were the same as anybody else. It was obvious they had nothing to do with Pearl Harbor." After the War, the resentment against the Japanese in Florin continued. If Mr. Tsukamoto tried to buy a part at the hardware store only to be told that the part was not in stock, he would ask Mr. Fletcher to buy it for him. Robert Emmett Fletcher, Jr., was born in San Francisco on July 26, 1911, when the city was still rebuilding after the great earthquake five years earlier. He attended the University of California, Davis, and later managed a peach orchard before taking the job as a state shipping point inspector. Survivors include his wife, the former Teresa Cassieri, to whom he was married for 67 years; their son, Robert Emmett III; three granddaughters; and five great-grandchildren. The Fletchers bought their own land in Florin after the War and raised hay and cattle. Mr. Fletcher was a volunteer firefighter for many decades before becoming the paid fire chief. He was also active in historical groups. He was never much for celebrating his role in the War, and he noted that other Florin residents had helped their Japanese neighbors. "I don't know about courage," he said in 2010 as Florin was preparing to honor him in a ceremony. "It took a devil of a lot of work."

FOUCEK, Oldrich Foucek Jr.

(Abstracted from <https://www.legacy.com/obituaries/mcall/obituary.aspx?n=oldrich-foucek&pid=157414867&fhid=8468>)
To legions of young boys (and girls, too) born soon after World War I, there was nothing more fascinating, nor romantic, than aircraft and aviators. For the vast majority of those children, that fascination faded with the onset of adulthood. A fortunate few, though, were able to spend a lifetime living out their childhood dreams. Oldrich (Al) Foucek, Jr. was one of those lucky ones. Al Foucek, who lived in Farmingdale, NY and Kunkletown, PA before moving to Bradenton, FL, died on April 30, 2012. Born on June 30, 1922 in the Yorkville neighborhood of Manhattan, Al was the son of Czech immigrants. His father was a baker, union official and writer for a Czech-language newspaper. Growing up, Al's heroes were the aces of World War I and the aviation pioneers of the 20s and 30s. His family moved in the midst of the Depression to Binghamton, NY so his father could find work; and, Al graduated from Binghamton Central High School in 1940. He attended Columbia University, studying engineering for two years. Following the outbreak of World War II, he worked as a junior engineer at Gruman Aircraft Co. before enlisting in the U.S. Army Air Corps. Al was a pilot, flying B-24 Liberators of the 460th Bomb Group (15th Air Force) out of Spinozzolo, Italy. He flew 27 missions and was awarded a Distinguished Flying Cross and Air Medal, with three oak leaf clusters. While on leave, and on his 23rd birthday, Al married his childhood sweetheart, Rose Zapletal. Following VJ-Day, Al was mustered out of the service, but his career in aviation would continue. He worked for National Airlines from 1945 until 1952, when he joined KLM Royal Dutch Airlines at Idlewild (now JFK) Airport. During his career with KLM, spanning more than three decades, he held numerous positions in both cargo and passenger operations, retiring as Station Manager. Al would continue the education interrupted by war and he graduated from the Baruch School of Business at City College of New York, where he was elected to Beta Gamma Sigma, the national business honor society. He also was certified by the FAA to teach the coursework (including weather and navigation) required for airline employees to be certified as Dispatchers. His wife, Rose died in 1981; and, in 1986, Al married Marijke Fokkema, with whom he shared many wonderful years traveling extensively and maintaining their stone farmhouse and surrounding property outside Kunkletown. In retirement, Al served on the Eldred Township Planning Commission and fought to preserve the rural character of that area. His letters to the editor were regularly published by the Morning Call and Pocono Record. His letters tended to comment upon national politics and the local environment, issues about which he was passionate. Some might say his organizational skills were compulsive; but, it was more his intellect that allowed him to pursue the hobbies of his boyhood, stamp and coin collecting, model building and photography, well beyond the time most of his generation had given up upon them. In his later years, reading and the New York Times crossword puzzle kept his mind sharp almost until the end of his life. Al Foucek is survived by his wife, Marijke; his two sons, Oldrich Foucek, III of Allentown and Roger of LaGrangeville, NY; their wives, Andrea and Louise and his four granddaughters, Alexis, Arielle, Chynna and Mia. Interred in Section 6, Site 966 in the National Cemetery in Sarasota, FL.

FRALEY, Naomi Parker Fraley

(Abstracted from <https://www.nytimes.com/2018/01/22/obituaries/naomi-parker-fraley-the-real-rosie-the-riveter-dies-at-96.html>)

Unsung for seven decades, the real Rosie the Riveter was a California waitress named Naomi Parker Fraley. Over the years, a welter of American women have been identified as the model for Rosie, the war worker of 1940s popular culture who became a feminist touchstone in the late 20th century. Mrs. Fraley, who died on Saturday January 20th, 2018, at 96, in Longview, WA, staked the most legitimate claim of all. But because her claim was eclipsed by another woman's, she went unrecognized for more than 70 years. "I didn't want fame or fortune," Mrs. Fraley told People magazine in 2016, when her connection to Rosie first became public. "But I did want my own identity." The search for the real Rosie is the story of one scholar's six-year intellectual treasure hunt. It is also the story of the construction — and deconstruction — of an American legend. "It turns out that almost everything we think about Rosie the Riveter is wrong," that scholar, James J. Kimble, told The Omaha World-Herald in 2016. "Wrong. Wrong. Wrong. Wrong. Wrong." For Dr. Kimble, the quest for Rosie, which began in earnest in 2010, "became an obsession," as he explained in an interview for this obituary in 2016. His research ultimately homed in on Mrs. Fraley, who had worked in a Navy machine shop during World War II. It also ruled out the best-known incumbent, Geraldine Hoff Doyle, a Michigan woman whose innocent assertion that she was Rosie was long accepted. On Mrs. Doyle's death in 2010, her claim was promulgated further through obituaries, including one in The New York Times. Dr. Kimble, an associate professor of communication and the arts at Seton Hall University in New Jersey, reported his findings in "Rosie's Secret Identity," a 2016 article in the journal Rhetoric & Public Affairs. The article brought journalists to Mrs. Fraley's door at long last. "The women of this country these days need some icons," Mrs. Fraley said in the People magazine interview. "If they think I'm one, I'm happy." The confusion over Rosie's identity stems partly from the fact that the name Rosie the Riveter has been applied to more than one cultural artifact. The first was a wartime song of that name, by Redd Evans and John Jacob Loeb. It told of a munitions worker who "keeps a sharp lookout for sabotage / Sitting up there on the fuselage." Recorded by the bandleader Kay Kyser and others, it became a hit. The "Rosie" behind that song is well known: Rosalind P. Walter, a Long Island woman who was a riveter on Corsair fighter planes and is now a philanthropist, most notably a benefactor of public television. Another Rosie sprang from Norman Rockwell, whose Saturday Evening Post cover of May 29, 1943, depicts a muscular woman in overalls (the name Rosie can be seen on her lunchbox), with a rivet gun on her lap and "Mein Kampf" crushed gleefully underfoot. Rockwell's model is known to have been a Vermont woman, Mary Doyle Keefe, who died in 2015. But in between those two Rosies lay the object of contention: a wartime industrial poster displayed briefly in Westinghouse Electric Corporation plants in 1943. Rendered in bold graphics and bright primary colors by the Pittsburgh artist J. Howard Miller, it depicts a young woman, clad in a work shirt and polka-dot bandanna. Flexing her arm, she declares, "We Can Do It!" (In 2017, The New Yorker published an updated Rosie, by Abigail Gray Swartz, on its cover of Feb. 6. It depicted a brown-skinned woman, sporting a pink knitted cap like those worn in recent women's marches, striking a similar pose.) Mr. Miller's poster was never meant for public display. It was intended only to deter absenteeism and strikes among Westinghouse employees in wartime. For decades his poster remained all but forgotten. Then, in the early 1980s, a copy came to light — most likely from the National Archives in Washington. It quickly became a feminist symbol, and the name Rosie the Riveter was applied retrospectively to the woman it portrayed. This newly anointed Rosie soon came to be considered the platonic form. It became ubiquitous on T-shirts, coffee mugs, posters and other memorabilia. The image piqued the attention of women who had done wartime work. Several identified themselves as having been its inspiration.
