He was a member of Patterson Baptist Church and was a former member of the Georgia Forestry Commission board of directors. Early in life, he followed in the footsteps of his father as a carpenter. His leadership skills were apparent and he quickly became a foreman. Eventually he formed a general contracting company with Maurice Zelminovitz which lasted until the early 1960's. In 1956, he became involved in the logging business, operating a pulpwood crew until 1965. During this period he became involved in tree planting, working as a sub-contractor to replant timberland. With his interest in machinery, it wasn't long before he designed and built a tree planter for pine seedlings. So successful was his planter, that he once fabricated 12 that were exported to Venezuela. In 1964 he started in the fence post business. The beginnings of this business were very humble. In fact, he started peeling posts in his backyard. But in 1965, with the help of Koppers Company, he moved his post operation to a site adjacent to the Satilla River and incorporated as Ace Post Company. At the height of its operation, he machined in excess of 1.3 million posts per year. In 1970, he was offered the opportunity to purchase a pole machine from Atlantic Creosoting Company in Homerville. After making vast improvements to the yard and mill operation, Homerville Pole Company began operations and produced in excess of 100,000 untreated utility poles per year. After moving to its current location, the consolidation of Ace Post Company and Homerville Pole Company became what is now known as Ace Pole Company in 1978. He continued to produce both untreated fence posts and utility poles completing a state-of-the-art CCA treating facility in the mid 1980s. This eventually led to his involvement in the treated utility pole business in 1987. Ace Pole Company, as it now stands, employs more than 100 full time employees and manufactured more than 250,000 CCA treated utility poles last year. Deliveries are made using a small fleet of company owned tractor trailers to utilities in seven southeastern states. He was also the founder of two equipment manufacturing companies, Ace Equipment Company and Ace Hydraulic Manufacturing Company.
